

AI as your sales coach.

Six copy-paste prompts for running your own calls through Claude. Every one uses the same four moves: give it a role, show it a real transcript, give it memory, and make one clear ask. The phrase “quote the exact moment or mark it MISSING” does the heavy lifting; it forces the answer to come from the transcript instead of being made up.

01

MEDDIC gap scorecard the workhorse. after any discovery or demo call

You're my deal-desk analyst. Score this call against MEDDIC. For each letter (Metrics, Economic buyer, Decision criteria, Decision process, Identify pain, Champion), quote the exact moment from the transcript that proves it, or mark it MISSING. Then give me the two questions I should have asked, and draft the follow-up email that closes the biggest gap.

Swap MEDDIC for SPICED, BANT, or Sandler. The structure holds.

02

Champion test when someone friendly might not be a champion

From this transcript, is [name] a champion or just a friendly coach? Check three things and cite the evidence for each: do they have access to power, do they have a personal win if this closes, and have they actually spent internal capital selling for us yet? End with one concrete ask that would test them.

03

Objection autopsy after a call with pushback

List every objection or pushback raised on this call, even the soft ones. Classify each as price, timing, authority, trust, or status quo. For each, quote what I said in response and score it 1 to 5, then write what a top rep would have said instead.

04

Coaching log update the memory move. run after every call

Here's my running coaching log and the transcript of today's call. Add a dated entry: what went well, gaps, and one focus for next call. First, check whether last entry's focus actually showed up on this call, and quote the moment where it did or didn't.

Keep one running file per rep (or per deal) and paste it back in each time.

05

Mutual action plan drafter right after next steps are agreed

Draft a mutual action plan from what was agreed on this call: every milestone, the owner on each side, and the date. Flag anything that has no owner or no date, because that's where the deal will stall. Format it so I can paste it straight into the follow-up email.

06

Forecast honesty check before you commit a number

I have this deal at 70% to close this quarter in my CRM. Using only what's in these transcripts, argue against that number. What has the buyer actually committed to, in their own words? What am I assuming that no one ever said?

✗ The anti-pattern: "Summarize this call."

Vague in, vague out. You get a bland blob you still have to rewrite.